What's New in the?

HTML2DVD is a program to convert a html file with links to a navigable DVD menu. It is written in c, and requires two programs from the dvdauthor and mjpegtools projects. mjpegtools is an MPEG2 video conversion package, and dvdauthor is a program to create navigable DVD menu files. The major design goal of HTML2DVD is for users to be able to make HTML-based navigable DVD menus from their web pages by selecting the HTML content to be created as a menu, the width to be used for the menu, and the location of the resulting menu. The HTML2DVD program can read both plain HTML pages and frames from NetNewsWire. To get started, simply type in an html page, then click on the menu button to start the conversion. To begin with the process, click the menu button, then type in the width that you would like the menu to be. In the sample above, the menu was displayed at a width of 1680 pixels. To create a navigable menu that displays in a television or other video player, type in the width that you would like the menu to be, then type in the location where the menu will be displayed. To specify the location, click the little sphere at the top left of the window, then click the little windows and points symbol. Click on the television or video player you would like to display the menu, then click the location where the menu will be displayed. HTML2DVD allows you to create navigable menus for HTML pages that contain links. To use HTML2DVD, create a directory with a.html file that contains the HTML code. The HTML code is rendered as a navigable DVD menu. Each menu item that has a link to another page is created as an element. The elements are created in the menu based on their location in the source code. At a location in the source code, each menu item is given a name that is taken from the text that appears in the tag that is associated with the menu item. The names of the menu items are based on the names of the links in the source HTML code. An HTML code page is rendered as a navigation menu. Below is a sample of the HTML code that was rendered. ABC
