Adobe MAX attendees will learn how the latest innovations in future-proofing, performance, collaboration, and AI-driven algorithms will accelerate the creation of premium cross-platform graphic content in a broad range of industries. "Today's releases showcase what's possible when Adobe and its creative partners combine imagination, collaboration and AI-driven innovation," said Marc Weiss, vice president and general manager, Creative Cloud. "These new Photoshop innovations, including Share for Review, Share Extensions and new editing features in the Layers and Media panel, not only make it easier for everyone to work on projects together - they will help elevate the entire photographic workflow." "Intelligent editing can be challenging for users to learn, so our design partners at Facebook wanted to make their collaboration experiences simple. That's why we created the new Share for Review feature," said Kalee Wiederhold, visual designer, Facebook. "With Share for Review, even a visual designer can now collaborate on editing projects without leaving Photoshop. Now, any project partners can review and comment on drafts from Photoshop in real time. In addition to enabling visually-oriented workflows, Share for Review will ultimately give content creators more flexibility when creating and collaborating on projects, as well as open new possibilities for designers." When you create new documents via the New Document wizard, the options to export as PDF or PSD files give you the choice to export these files in PSD and PDF formats, respectively. Or, you can even export them as an EPS file that you can import later into your Photoshop layer(s). Many image editing tasks can be performed in an EPS file that's loaded into Photoshop, allowing for export of common EPS files, including Isoimage, Smarta, and JPEG."
